

Killed (and approximate distance from the National Guard):

- Allison B. Krause; age 19; 343 ft --fatal left chest wound; died later that day
- Jeffrey Glenn Miller; age 20; 265 ft -- shot through the mouth; killed instantly
- William Knox Schroeder; age 19; 382 ft --fatal chest wound; died almost an hour later in a hospital while waiting for surgery
- Sandra Lee Scheuer; age 20; 390 ft -- fatal neck wound; died a few minutes later from loss of blood

Wounded (and approximate distance from the National Guard):

- Joseph Lewis Jr.; 71 ft -- hit twice in the right abdomen and left lower leg
- John R. Cleary; 110 ft – hit in upper left chest
- Thomas Mark Grace; 225 ft -- struck in left ankle
- Alan Michael Canfora; 225 ft -- hit in his right wrist
- Dean R. Kahler; 300 ft – hit in back fracturing the vertebrae, permanently paralyzed from the chest down
- Douglas Alan Wrentmore; 329 ft -- hit in his right knee
- James Dennis Russell; 375 ft -- hit in his right thigh from a bullet and in the right forehead by birdshot, both wounds minor
- Robert Follis Stamps; 495 ft -- hit in his right buttock
- Donald Scott MacKenzie; 750 ft -- neck wound

The shootings led to protests on college campuses throughout the United States, and a student strike, causing more than 450 campuses across the country to close with both violent and non-violent demonstrations. A common sentiment was expressed by students at New York University with a banner hung out of a window which read "They Can't Kill Us All." On May 8, eleven people were bayoneted at the University of New Mexico by the New Mexico National Guard in a confrontation with student protesters. Also on May 8, an antiwar protest at New York's Federal Hall held at least partly in reaction to the Kent State killings was met with a counter-rally of pro-Nixon construction workers organized by Peter J. Brennan, later appointed U.S. Labor Secretary by President Nixon, resulting in the "Hard Hat Riot".

<https://sites.google.com/a/lakewoodcityschools.org/kent-state-shootings/casualties>